Publisher's Notes

By Timothy J. Pade • pade@dgnt.com

Rarely do I critique properties or golf properties in a negative light. However, in this case, I was so frustrated and alarmed, I thought someone should speak out. But first, the good news.

This past summer I visited a number of the world's most famous golf properties. At Torrey Pines in California, I found the Lodge at Torrey Pines to be a world-class property. The food, the service and, in particular, the lodging are absolutely on par with the resort's well-deserved AAA Five Diamond designation.

Then it was off to the home of golf, Scotland. The Old Course Hotel St. Andrews delivered a similar Five Star experience with its impeccable service, fabulous spa and rooms with amazing views, fit for Old Tom Morris himself.

One of the newest fine golf resorts I discovered in my travels—perhaps now in my top five recommendations of international golf properties—is in Aberdeen, Scotland. I can only say 'Wow!' about Trump International Golf Links, 'Fantastic' and 'Wow!' again. This incredible resort will easily rank in the World Top 25, in my opinion. It offers a manor house fit for any king—or maybe any president—not to mention spectacular accommodations and food.

It would seem obvious that when building a world-class golf property there should be world-class accommodations to go with it. From the oldest golf properties in the world to the newest, you would have to look hard to find one that does not offer world-class accommodations—until now.

I once again made the "holy grail" trek to another of my favorite golf destinations, Central Oregon. I experienced spectacular golf and accommodations in Sunriver at the Lodge at Sunriver, as well as stellar golf and hotels throughout Bend. Then it was on to the Oregon coast, home of the world-famous Bandon Dunes courses. There are five in all, though Pacific Dunes, Bandon Dunes and Pacific Trails are the three most notable. Nearby Coos Bay is charming, a quiet community with nice restaurants; however, it offers no lodging or accommodations anywhere near the golf.

Opened in 1999 by billionaire Recycled Paper Greeting Card co-founder Mike Keiser, Bandon Dunes Golf Resort offers world-class golf but shockingly unexceptional accommodations. The Lodge does have a bar and restaurants and nice golf shop, but the rooms are lackluster at best. No frills here. No cozy, quaint five-star accommodations—in fact, not even one star! The Lily Pond cottages, while roomy, provide little more than a bed, TV and bathroom, and the resort's other options follow suit. All are sterile and unremarkable at best. The demographic of golfers is "affluent." Most who travel to play the world's most amazing golf courses can and do pay for high-end accommodations.

When I discussed the lack of luxury with some of the staff, their response was, "Everything here is about the golf. Our motto is 'golf as it was meant to be.'" As a golf fanatic, I can appreciate the motto. Still, I think the mark was missed here. From Scotland and North America to the far reaches of the world, accommodations are an important part of any travel and destination experience, including at the world's top golf resorts. Bandon Dunes absolutely provides world-class golf. It's too bad that the vision of the entire experience was lost on its owner. Perhaps their motto should be "accommodations aren't as they should be..."

Just sayin'

Jose Higueras

is a Game Changer

The USTA visionary has a plan to make tennis great again

By Matt McKay

The future of tennis in the United States is being directed from Palm Springs, and the man holding the baton is longtime resident and one-man tennis powerhouse, Jose Higueras.

Higueras, a 63-year old Catalanian (and still an avid fan of FC Barcelona), made his name on the men's professional tour for nearly a decade in the 1970s and '80s, claiming 16 singles victories before retiring from the competitive game in his early 30s. His skills and successes as a coach following retirement led to his position as the director of coaching and player development for the United States Tennis Association, a job he's taken on with gusto for the last eight years.

he began work with the USTA, he'd helped many tennis greats reach the pinnacle of the game, including Jim Courier, Michael Chang and Pete Sampras.

"As I became involved in coaching, I knew it was what I wanted to do," Higueras says. "I was fortunate enough to come across some good talent over the years, and because of my years on tour and my experience playing, I was able to help them. From there, it becomes easier for all players to believe that you can help them, and it was a good thing for me."

One-on-one coaching has been in Higueras' rearview mirror for some time now, as his USTA tasks occupy him fulltime. Before he took the job, he thought long and hard about the commitment. As

Jose and Donna Higueras (nee Bogert) with Patron

Higueras has been a driving force on the scene and behind the scenes for the association, creating a national structure where there was basically none before. And he has orchestrated it all from his Palm Springs base, the town he's coached from, taught in and called home for more than 30 years.

While he could have coached in any of the country's tennis strongholds, Higueras chose to settle in Palm Springs in part because of its reputation as a tennis hotbed. It didn't hurt that he fell in love with, and eventually married, Donna Bogert, daughter of legendary Palm Springs mayor and businessman Frank Bogert.

Higueras knew he wanted to stay connected to tennis after he retired from competition, but he was unsure how he would accomplish it. While on the road to figuring it out, he slipped easily into coaching, and quickly developed a reputation for being an effective trainer. Top players began to seek out his advice, and when they experienced success, others followed, hoping to get the same career boost Higueras had provided to their competition. Before a coach, he'd always called his own scheduling shots, saying "[I've] never had a fulltime job in my life." He considered the challenge of taking on a job that encompassed the entire country and the size of the USTA, and it was daunting. But after eight years on the job, he calls it the most rewarding work of his life.

When he started, Higueras thought he would just manage the USTA's tennis centers in New York City, Boca Raton, Florida, and Carson, California. However, as he eased into the job, he began to realize there were no specific guidelines or consistency for player and coach development on the national level. He set about putting together a teaching and coaching philosophy, and began to reach out to members and coaches to initiate good relationships. That personal touch has him in the air a great deal of his time. "I've pretty much got any executive, platinum, all-you-can-get from my airlines," he says.

With the national structure taking hold, his role will change slightly again at the end of the year, when he plans to concentrate

In his youth, Jose Higuera was a matador

During the last few years, Higuera has concentrated on getting a lot of the departments together “and making it a big family, getting tennis back to where I believe it should be,” he says, “which is at the top. We’ve been suffering for a little too long but now we hope we are on the right track.”

Higuera’s master plan has the USTA focused on the nation’s young athletes and on expanding the association’s exposure and widening the scope of athletes participating in the tennis pool, intentionally going well outside the country-club demographic. Higuera believes that Serena and Venus Williams, along with a slight boost from pay equality, have ignited interest among a segment of young athletes who were previously wholly uninterested in the game. Higuera and the USTA want to build on that.

“We don’t get the best athletes in the country playing tennis, not even close,” Higuera says. “So we’re hoping to bring the game to places where kids don’t have a lot opportunities to play, get them playing early and keep them playing.”

more on player development. “I’m going to go back to what I was doing before, which is more working X-amount of weeks per year directly with our best prospects and some of the coaches.”

SHOULD YOU HIRE A REAL ESTATE AGENT OR LAWYER TO BUY A HOUSE?

If you’re selling a house in California, then it’s critical that you have a licensed real estate agent list your property on the Multiple Listing Service (MLS) so that the seller obtains the best marketing exposure; but, if you’re buying a house, you might be surprised to learn that using a lawyer is often a better alternative to the normal agency relationship.

Uncomplicating the Complicated in All Aspects of Business and Real Estate Law and Estate Planning

HERE’S WHY:

■ LAWYERS OWE THEIR CLIENTS HIGHER DUTIES THAN AGENTS

Real estate agents owe their clients typical fiduciary duties of good faith, fair dealing and full disclosure, but these duties are fairly limited. For example, agents in California can (and often do) represent both the buyer and seller of a home, or may even have a personal interest in the transaction, as long as the proper disclosures are made. Lawyers, on the other hand, are ethically bound to avoid conflicts of interest by representing only the interests of one party, and a lawyer may not have a personal interest in the transaction. Lawyers owe their clients the highest duties of loyalty and fidelity.

■ AGENTS CANNOT GIVE LEGAL ADVICE

Real estate agents are not authorized to practice law. This means that they can help negotiate and fill-in blanks on a form selected by the parties or act as a scrivener in recording the parties’ agreement, but that’s about it. Lawyers, on the other hand, are specifically trained and authorized to practice law without limitation. Moreover, lawyers owe their clients a duty of competency, including a duty of diligence that far exceeds the duties of a real estate agent. This means that lawyers are supposed to think about and anticipate potential problems in the transaction that agents often overlook (often resulting in expensive litigation), and lawyers must advise their clients accordingly.

■ AGENTS ARE PAID ONLY IF THE SALE IS COMPLETED

This may sound like a benefit to a homebuyer, but the fact that a real estate agent only earns a commission if the deal closes creates inherent conflict and bias in the agency relationship. The agent is obviously incentivized to make sure the transaction is completed so they can get paid, even if the closing may not be in the buyer’s best interests. This conflict is even more pronounced when the agent represents both the buyer and seller in the transaction, since a buyer’s interests are in direct conflict with the seller’s interests—the buyer wants the lowest possible price while the seller wants the highest possible price. Recognizing this inherent conflict, some states actually prohibit such dual agency. Lawyers, on the other hand, typically charge an hourly or flat fee, such that they are unaffected by the transaction itself.

■ ANDERHOLT WHITTAKER LLP OFFERS THE BEST SOLUTION

The real estate lawyers at Anderholt Whittaker LLP are extremely knowledgeable about the local real estate market and have access to the same tools as real estate agents, but our focus is strictly put on you, as the buyer. We have a licensed real estate broker who is also an experienced and knowledgeable real estate lawyer in our ranks. We also offer flat-fee and hybrid contingency fee arrangements so that our homebuyers can realize the benefit of the commission based fee structure without suffering the detriment and inherent conflict that taints the typical agency relationship. Please don’t hesitate to call us for a free consultation if you are looking for real estate in the Coachella Valley.

Cream of the Crop:

Coachella Valley's Public Golf Courses

By Chris Lewis

These superb courses help make the Coachella Valley one of the world's premier golfing destinations

SilverRock Resort

The Old Course at St. Andrew's, Pebble Beach Golf Links, Augusta National Golf Club. When golfers think about the "best of the best," there are some names that will forever be associated with greatness. This same connotation applies to the Coachella Valley, especially with regard to its public golf courses.

Whether golfers are interested in walking on the same fairways as their favorite PGA Tour players, pursuing a new challenge or simply soaking in the sun and taking in the breathtaking views, they should consider booking tee times at these worthy public courses.

Classic Club, Palm Desert

A former host of the PGA Tour's Bob Hope Chrysler Classic, the Classic Club—designed by the King, Arnold Palmer—was developed for golfers of all skill levels. It features wide fairways, copious pine trees and pine straw, 30 acres of water and five sets of tees. It ranges from 4,219 to 7,322 yards.

Owned by the H.N. and Frances C. Berger Foundation and operated by Troon Golf, Classic Club also features a new, three-story, 63,000-square-foot clubhouse, a full-service golf shop and Bellatrix, a gorgeous restaurant that offers guests a wide range of lunch and dinner items.

"Bellatrix's food and wine list is among the best in the valley," says Greg Rubino, general manager, Classic Club. "Just like the golf course, it is first class from start to finish."

Classic Club

Desert Willow Golf Resort

Desert Willow Golf Resort, Palm Desert

Owned by the city of Palm Desert and managed by Northbrook, Illinois-based KemperSports, Desert Willow Golf Resort offers guests two 18-hole courses designed by Michael Hurdzan and Dana Fry.

Previously recognized by Golf Digest as a “Place to Play,” Firecliff is arguably the more challenging of the two courses. Measuring 7,056 yards, it features more than 90 bunkers, desert waste areas and a variety of water hazards that challenge even low-handicappers.

“Mountain View, on the other hand,” says Bruce Nation, director of sales and marketing at the resort, “is a more player-friendly resort course as it stretches out just over 6,900 yards. Each course,” he adds, “offers very different yet exceptional golf experiences.”

Together the two courses average more than 80,000 rounds per year.

Escena Golf Club, Palm Desert

Previously ranked by pgatour.com as the sixth best public golf course in California, Escena Golf Club was designed with golfers of all experience levels in mind. Four sets of tees offer a length ranging from 5,503 to 7,173 yards. For the more experienced golfer, numerous bunkers, water hazards and undulated greens provide a challenge. If guests simply want to enjoy the scenery, they won’t be disappointed. The San Jacinto Mountains provide a spectacular backdrop in addition to the prominent palm trees and desert landscaping.

Managed by Toledo, Ohio-based Sunrise Golf, the club also features a popular indoor/outdoor dining destination—Escena Lounge & Grill—that has been ranked among Open Table’s Best Alfresco Dining Restaurants in America. “Open year-round for breakfast, lunch, dinner and Sunday brunch, Escena Lounge & Grill offers fresh, eclectic American cuisine that pairs perfectly with the jaw-dropping views,” says John Fitzpatrick, COO of Sunrise Golf.

Indian Canyons Golf Resort

Indian Canyons Golf Resort, Palm Desert

Since 1961, Indian Canyons Golf Resort has been one of the Coachella Valley’s prime destinations for golf. Owned and managed by the Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians, the resort features two 18-hole courses—the North and the South.

Recognized as the longer and arguably more challenging of the two courses, the North, ranging from 5,788 to 6,943 yards, offers guests five sets of tees to choose from. When guests are not gazing at the San Jacinto Mountains in between shots, they may want to check out the North Course’s Disney fountain, which shoots more than 100 feet of water into the air. It’s located in a lake between the 9th and 18th holes.

For golfers seeking a shorter layout, the South Course also provides five sets of tees and a range from 4,826 to 6,560 yards. It was remodeled in 2004 with the assistance of LPGA Hall of Famer Amy Alcott, a five-time major champion.

After finishing their rounds at either course, guests are welcomed to enjoy a meal at the South Course Restaurant, which serves breakfast, lunch and Sunday brunch.

Indian Wells Golf Resort, Indian Wells

As the only 36-hole facility in California to have both of its courses ranked among Golfweek's top 30 "Best Courses You Can Play" in the state, Indian Wells Golf Resort has been attracting players from around the world for 10 years. Opened in November 2006, its Celebrity Course, a Clive Clark design, features four sets of tees plus vivid mountain vistas, streams, lakes and waterfalls. The course ranges from 5,316 to 7,050 yards.

The Players Course, designed by John Fought and opened in November 2007, is just as striking. It also features four sets of tees and provides plenty of challenges to golfers, regardless of their handicap, including an undulated terrain and a wide array of bunkers. Depending on the tee used, the course runs 5,108 to 7,376 yards.

"Indian Wells Golf Resort consistently provides guests a premier golfing experience," says Michael Tebbetts, director of sales and marketing at the resort. "Our team makes a point of ensuring that each guest feels like they are part of our family and are being welcomed into our home."

SilverRock Resort, La Quinta

Consistently rated as one of the Coachella Valley's best public courses by publications such as Golfweek and Golf, SilverRock Resort's 7,578-yard Arnold

Palmer Classic Course served as a host of the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic from 2008 to 2011. Its challenging layout and natural surroundings, particularly the Santa Rosa Mountains, continue to attract highly skilled golfers from around the world. Yet, it is also popular among less experienced golfers, as its four other sets of tees provide a range from 4,884 to 7,146 yards.

Owned by the city of La Quinta and operated by Landmark Golf Management, LLC, SilverRock also features its highly popular Grill serving up a wide array of delicacies such as fish tacos and Kobe beef burgers.

"The Grill's outdoor patio is perfect for guests, as it overlooks the golf course and surrounding mountains," says Randy J. Duncan, PGA, the resort's general manager and director of golf. "With no homes, roads or anything else around except for a gorgeous golf course, the vibe and scenery are second to none."

Are All New Courses Contrived?

Our Desert Golf & Tennis course design expert has some thoughts

Sunningdale Golf Club - 18th Green and Majestic old Oak

By Clive Clark

It's always fascinating browsing through the rankings of the World's Top 100 golf courses. It's equally fascinating to note, for instance, that in the latest Golf Digest Top 100, one has to go down to No.16 (Cape Kidnapper's in New Zealand) to find a course that has been built within the last 20 years.

You'd think this would have golf architects up and down the length and breadth of America scratching their heads. Is it possible that these old classic courses, many of them built with horses and carts and laborers, can still beat the layouts of today's whiz kids with their bulldozers, teams of experts and computers?

According to the judges, it seems so.

But before Messrs. Nicklaus, Palmer, Fazio and Dye hurl their drawing boards and computers into the lake and hang up their site boots, let's consider some logical explanations. One of the most obvious is that many of the greatest sites are simply not available. Sites such as Cypress Point, Pine Valley, Ballybunion, Shinnecock Hills and the great links sites (including The Old Course at St Andrews, which is 600 years old) seldom present themselves today. And even if they do, obtaining permits can prove to be a long, drawn out and ultimately futile task.

The architects of today have to create many of their courses from sites they would not necessarily choose as prime golf-course terrain. In spite of their majestic glory in terms of shaping features and landscaping, it's of little surprise that to some viewers, these high-profile new courses can appear a bit contrived. The fact is, if you build a course in a flat chunk of desert, it is contrived!

In defense of new courses, I would say that not all of them look new or contrived. One course I designed—of which I am very proud—is Belgrade Lakes Golf Club in Maine. This course has been ranked by Golf Digest not only as the No.1 course in Maine, but within four years of its opening was ranked by the same magazine as the No.1 course in New England. As you can see by the photograph taken within a couple of years of opening, Belgrade Lakes Golf Club looks like it has been there “forever.”

In defense of modern architects, it's important to point out that on the majority of sites, new courses take time to mature. As one leading golf authority, Peter Alliss, once observed, “It takes but 10 minutes to chop down a tree, but some 40 years to grow it.”

Needless to say, I have my own list of courses that are my personal favorites and, yes, some of those classic old courses are included. My list starts with Cypress Point, Pine Valley and Augusta National. In Britain, Sunningdale and Ganton would be automatic favorites together with such links courses as Muirfield, Turnberry and, of course, The Old Course at St Andrews.

Pebble Beach hits most golfers' lists fairly quickly; however, great though Pebble is, I prefer the Pete Dye course, Teeth of the Dog, in the Dominican Republic. It has four cliff-top holes overlooking the Caribbean on the front nine, and three on the way home. The 16th is a classic par 3 where, from the back tee, a 3-iron shot invariably has to be precariously dangled over the ocean for 90 percent of its flight.

But let's go back to the links courses for a moment. About a third of the World's Top 100 Courses are genuine links. I hear someone saying, “Of course they are,” but, hey, not so fast. There are roughly 34,000 golf courses in the world, and according to an excellent coffee-table book titled, “True Links,” co-authored by legendary writers Malcolm Campbell and George Peper, there are only 246 genuine links courses in the entire world. What? And 30 to 35 of them are in the World's Top 100? Indeed they are. You can figure out the percentages for yourself. Out of only 246 genuine links courses, around 30 or so sail into the World's Top 100. These courses are the rare gems of historic, real and authentic golf.

A few years ago, I had the chance to play at Shinnecock Hills with an old friend of mine, broadcaster Jack Whitaker. Shinnecock, which is tucked away in the Hamptons on Long Island, was built in 1892. It is one of the oldest courses in the United States and has every bit of the delight and charm of its worthy reputation. Even the fact that while playing ‘safe’ I thinned a 3-iron off the 13th tee didn't spoil my day. It did, however, spoil that of Don McDougall, the club professional. Coincidentally, he was driving his car on a narrow road just below the 13th tee on his way back to the clubhouse when my pathetic effort from the tee shattered the back window of his gleaming new Toyota van. Profuse apologies abounded. That was my first introduction to Mr. McDougall.

The following day when I returned to play, I went to check things out in the pro shop. There Mrs. McDougall greeted me, observing, “Mr. Clark, I'm going to keep him in today until you've finished your round!”

Anyone who has been fortunate enough to participate in the Equine Experience at Miraval Resort and Spa in Tucson, Arizona, knows it's not about the horse. At Miraval, Wyatt Webb uses a horse-based experience to encourage participants to dig deep in a therapeutic way, to them clear the obstacles in their life that are holding them back from reaching their full potential. For athletes, this can be the difference between winning and losing. For us average folk, it's an opportunity to get out of our own way and confidently attack life's issues.

Likewise, yoga students can only obtain that same sense of empowerment when they realize, "it's not about the pose." Yin Yoga Teacher Bernie Clark uses the clouds in the sky as a metaphor for our true nature. While we know that the blue sky is somewhere behind the clouds, we are so focused on the clouds (our thoughts and distractions) that we can't truly focus on who or what we are. Brand-new students in Bikram Yoga classes are instructed to face themselves in the mirror every class. They focus on the individual postures in a physical way, but often instead of listening to the instructors, they are distracted by looking around at other students to see how they are doing that pose.

As students advance, ego often gets in the way and becomes the distraction. They try to outdo their neighbor by going deeper into their backward bend or kicking their leg up higher over their head. Placing value on depth or height can cause a student to surpass the level where optimal therapeutic benefit is gained from the pose.

While alignment, proper balance and, yes, mastering a greater level of achievement are important in any physical exercise, including yoga, the true essence of yoga transcends the body. Only when a student completely understands how to use the mind to control the pose can one fully embrace the real essence of yoga.

For most students, this cognitive ability takes months, sometimes years. Sadly for some, it never happens. When a student does have a mental breakthrough in class it is usually followed by tears and self-awakening—not unlike what one experiences in group therapy sessions such as the one at Miraval.

I often hear my students say, "Bikram Yoga is my therapy, my sanity." Every now and then, a brand new student experiences a breakthrough after just one or two classes.

Irma MC came to Bikram Yoga interested to try a class, yet she expressed fears of intimidation, health concerns and self-doubt. Willing to give it try and knowing it was OK to take a knee if she started feeling light-headed or dizzy, Irma signed up for our introductory special.

The hardships we face in Bikram Yoga are not unlike the hardships we face in our every day life. The series forces one to look in the mirror and face the suffering. Bikram himself would often quip, "It's not enough to suffer; you must look at yourself in the mirror while you suffer." If that's not enough, there is the heat element added to the mix. While we know the healing benefits of the heat, it's hard to get past the mental distraction when you know you are sweating profusely. That's where the power of the mind comes in. Understanding that this is just another "distraction" is half the battle. How you deal with it becomes the other half.

People sit down and quit all the time and they make excuses. I've heard many such excuses over the years: "This is too hard." "This is stupid." "I'll never be able to do this." Often these are the same excuses used for not being able to accomplish life's tasks outside the hot room. They are the ugly tapes we play over and over in our minds, which can paralyze us and prevent us from reaching our full potential.

Irma got through her first class alive. When she came to class No. 2, she had a big smile on her face reflecting accomplishment. But class No. 2 proved to be more than she had bargained for. Halfway through class, Irma sat in the middle of her mat and cried.

After class, she sat on the bench in the reception area and shared an amazing breakthrough. "This class tells you a lot about yourself," she said. "All my life I have done things out of turn. I never had the patience or confidence to wait for the proper timing. I noticed I was doing that in this class. I was trying to move before the rest of the students." Irma's memory was flooded with a lifetime of instances when she had reacted and made a preemptive move unnecessarily or out of turn.

The Bikram series is not haphazard. It's not a "do what you want when you want at your own pace" type of class. It's a group effort. It levels the playing field. No one cares what kind of house you live in, what kind of car you drive or what brand of golf clubs are in your bag. It is structured, it is disciplined and it is synchronized. We all move together at the very same time and at the instructor's command. It forces individuals to focus and listen and makes them stand out when they are moving opposite the group.

If you are truly focused, listening and concentrating, you will be able to move in and out of the poses safely and successfully and master each pose step by step. In turn, you will discover the healing benefits of each pose and feel the positive effects in your everyday life. And while you are living the life of optimal health, you may even graduate to a higher level of thinking. Someday you will realize it was never about the pose in the first place.

Golfer's Playbook

Sand Play Made Simple

PGA West features some very difficult bunker shots throughout its six golf courses. Whether it's a tough greenside bunker shot or a challenging fairway bunker shot, there are ways to make sand play simpler for you.

Greenside Bunker Basics With Josh Myers

For the average player, the greenside bunker can look more like a grave than a sand trap. This somewhat terrifying shot and the pressure accompanying it can make players abandon all basic fundamentals. Instead, they try to make up a swing in order to get the desired result. Here are a few tips you can use to create an effective "escape plan."

Keep The Set-up Simple

I set up relatively square to slightly open with my feet and shoulders, placing the ball one to two balls forward of the middle of my stance and pointing the butt end of the club toward my belt buckle. I like to open the clubface a few degrees in order to add loft and expose the bounce. The pressure with my feet should feel braced and favoring my lead leg about 60 percent.

Splash The Sand

Essentially, I am trying to hit this shot fat, meaning approximately two to four inches behind the ball. I want my body leaning slightly forward as I take a shallow cut of sand. To do so, I create some speed and avoid digging with the leading edge.

Here's a good drill: Try to "splash" the sand consistently between the lines, keeping your focus on creating consistent depth in the sand with each splash.

Nail The Finish

I allow my weight to move exclusively to my lead foot, keeping some air underneath my trail foot. This helps me avoid falling back through impact in an effort to lift the ball up and out of the bunker. I keep my primary focus on turning through with my chest and eyes facing the target, the club shaft resting at the base of my neck.

Fairway Bunker Basics With John Battaglia

When faced with a fairway bunker shot, hitting the ball before the sand is key. Catching the ball clean on the clubface prior to making contact with sand helps control the distance the ball travels to the target from the sand. There are some things I do in my set up that greatly increase my chances of making good contact.

Grip Down

First, I like to grip down on the club, which makes the shaft shorter. This makes it easier for me to control the low point at impact. Placing my hands in the middle of the club is a good general rule for fairway bunkers. As I place my hands on the club, I also like to keep my grip pressure light. I don't let my grip pressure increase for this shot.

Set-up Posture and Ball Position

I reduce the amount of flex in my knees and bend slightly less from my hips. I like the feeling of extending my arms in my set up and not having the golf club too close to the sand. I also like to have the ball placed closer to the middle of my stance to ensure making clean contact with the ball. Making these slight changes in my set up makes a huge difference in executing the fairway bunker shot effectively.

Hit Down Slightly

After making the changes to my set up, I treat the fairway bunker shot as I would if the ball were on the grass. Having a slightly descending strike on the ball gives me the best chance of making solid contact with the ball first, followed by contact with the sand. This clean contact helps me control the distance the ball travels to the target.

Physics & The Golf Swing

If you really to want improve your golf swing, learn how to use Newton's third law

The golf swing is an enigma to most golfers. Regardless of how many lessons are taken or how many instructional articles and books are read, rarely do players actually improve and often they become more confused.

The problem is this: The concept of how to apply force to the ball is not clear or is entirely misunderstood.

To clarify how to apply body force to the club and increase club-head speed, we need to recall Sir Isaac Newton's laws of motion, which are basic scientific theories of physics, mechanics and dynamics. Regardless of what the sporting activity is, when the objective is to throw, strike or kick an object for distance, the sequence of motion from the ground up theoretically is the same. Power is generated from the ground and transferred through the body to the object. This brings us to Newton's third law: for every action there is an opposite and equal reaction. The ground will give us exactly the same magnitude of force we give it in the exact opposite direction.

For example, if I weigh 130 lbs. and I stand still, the ground is applying exactly 130 lbs. of force vertically (the opposite direction of my weight) back at me. This can be hard to understand and conceptualize because we don't see or feel the ground pushing back, but it is happening. If I jump up and down, then the magnitude of the force I'm applying is also increasing and the ground is applying the same amount of force right back at me. This is the missing piece for most golfers in understanding how to generate power from the ground up. You can see it when you watch the pros, but how to do it yourself is not well understood. The force cannot be seen, but it can be felt through how we apply pressure to the ground (ground reaction forces or GRFs).

A key point to remember is that forces happen in couples and one is always equal and opposite to the other. Good golfers keep balance well because their left foot (lead foot for right-handed golfers) pushes down through the ground firmly at the impact zone to create the proper force to offset the centrifugal force (outward seeking force) of the club head. This is Newton's third law in action! The body must resist the force being created by the swinging club.

Do you remember the old game tetherball? There is a pole with a ball attached to a rope and you hit the ball and it goes in a circular orbit around the pole. If the pole were not strong it could not resist the circular force of the ball. The pole would break and the ball would no longer travel in that circular orbit and would be sent off on its tangential path. Your body is the pole and the club head is the tetherball.

Power is generated with the legs and the core transmits that power to the arms and club. The lower body needs to be strong and powerful to generate the force, while the core needs to be strong and stable to transmit the force without any energy leaks. The arms are simply transmission lines; they do not necessarily need to be strong but they should be tension-free and whippy.

This is one reason it is difficult for golfers to "stay in posture" or "stay in the box." It's not that they don't want to or don't understand that staying in posture is important; the problem is that the intention of how to apply the force is wrong. Until this concept changes in one's mind, it will not be possible to stay in posture.

Newton's third law tells us about the key concepts the golfer needs to refine:

- You can create about 100 lbs. of force by swinging the club, but you have to generate and accept this force by using your feet, legs and trunk. The left foot, for example, should be pushing down into the ground. There are two forces you can control at impact: 1) more weight to the left foot to push the ground, and 2) the chest and left shoulder's (not arm) pulling force countering the centrifugal (outward seeking) force.

- The centrifugal force of the club at impact will want to pull you down. Using your legs and feet to push the ground away will make your chest and left shoulder strong to counter the club's pulling force. These are equal and opposite forces that offset each other, keep you balanced and generate more force/power. This is the ultimate objective and will enhance club-head speed.

If you simply copy the positions of a pro golfer but don't know how he or she controls the forces during the swing, it will be very difficult to replicate it. You can improve your golf swing by learning Newton's laws and applying them in practice. If your mind is clear in thought and intention, the nerves and muscles (neuromuscular system) will execute it perfectly.

Give your Home a Fall Facelift on a Budget

It does not have to cost a fortune to refresh and update your home

As we enter into the fall season and welcome cooler temperatures, it's time to consider rejuvenating your home. Whether you're preparing to sell or just want to enjoy a fresh look, here are some tips to help.

To start, deep clean your home inside and out. Flooring is one of the top assets of a home so in addition to cleaning the carpets, don't forget to get the tile or stone cleaned as well. A deep clean should also include de-cluttering the stuff you have accumulated without even realizing it. Check pantries, closets, bathrooms and guest rooms. Many homes are also loaded with artificial trees and plants that I like to call "dust catchers." I advise eliminating most of these items.

The cleaning should include a thorough power wash of the exterior of the home and windows. This is also a perfect time to thin out overgrown landscaping and replace plants and shrubs that didn't make it through the hot summer. Don't forget to plant those fall flowers for lots of color. Acid washing your pool stone and tile to get rid of hard-water stains is also a must.

Painting the inside of any home can have a freshening effect. Today, lighter is what is popular. White with gray tones on smooth walls is highly desirable, while the heavy faux painting in yellow tones is no longer in vogue. It's amazing how a fresh coat of paint can change the whole look and feel of your home.

In the living room, provide a refresh with the simple addition of a new rug and colorful pillows on sofas and chairs. Pick a color to accent your current furniture. Turquoise, blues and orange are currently popular. Have some fun with inexpensive accessories and change pictures to add personality. You can also update your dining area with the same color scheme by adding a centerpiece.

Next up: The kitchen. There are many easy and inexpensive updates, such as new hardware on cabinet doors. A backsplash can update any counter surface with a new look. Purchase a few decorative items in a color theme to freshen the look.

Bathrooms are often among the most neglected areas of a house. Consider new linens, soap dispensers and area rugs that provide a modern feel. This is also a room where you can change cabinet hardware to great effect. New light fixtures and mirrors can make a big difference.

New bedding provides an immediate update to bedrooms, and there are many sources for great prices on these items. One way to make a room look instantly bigger is to get rid of those massive TV armoire cabinets. Instead, use tables to hold TVs or mount them on the wall.

Don't forget your patio area. Are your tables and chair cushions in good shape? Here in the desert we have the perfect climate for entertaining outside so take advantage of it. Consider adding a small table that is also a fire pit, another currently popular item. Use indoor furniture outdoors. Potted plants add to the ambiance.

Finally, if you find the whole thing intimidating, hire a home stager or decorator. Many homeowners shy away from this idea for fear of a high price tag; however, most of these individuals work on an hourly basis and the result is well worth the money spent.

As part of my real estate business, I offer this service to my clients at no charge. I find it has cut in half the time houses are on the market. It also lets me know who is a serious seller.

If you're selling, these highly affordable but still meaningful changes can potentially make your home more desirable and help buyers see the best in it.

Dining in the Desert

Fall is For Al Fresco!

La Spiga

Rockwood Grill

With the torrid days of summer past, the valley mellows into a seasonal mood where great weather, blue skies and fresh, autumnal ingredients beckon diners to experience the great outdoors on the patios and in the tree-lined courtyards of world-class restaurants. Fall in the desert is synonymous with dining al fresco and we've compiled a selection of the best experiences around.

An elegant lunch with friends can be had at Chef Bernard Dervieux's

Cuistot (72597 El Paseo, Palm Desert, 760.340.1000), where rustic countryside charm abounds and the terrace overlooks the lagoon and waterfall of the Faye Sarkowsky Sculpture Garden at the Galen Museum. In this heavenly setting in front of an Old World stone fireplace, patrons can sip fine Champagne under crisp autumn skies while enjoying the popular "Lunch Box," a French take on the Japanese Bento box, which includes a cup of soup du jour, small salad, entrée and dessert. cuistotrestaurant.com

Opt for garden seating at La Spiga (72-557 Highway 111, Palm Desert, 760.340.9318) where you can enjoy a meal accompanied by unobstructed mountain views and wafting scents from the fruit trees, vegetable plants and flowers that dot the 25,000-square-foot property. For a romantic rendezvous, choose piazza dining under the moon or in private gazebos. The owners recently traveled to Italy to seek out new menu ideas and wine selections, so look for the house-made sausage, seasonal pasta of white truffles or the whole-fish branzino. Be sure to leave room for a creamy gelato. laspigapalmdesert.com

When the sun sets, it reflects its last light across the surface of the waterways adjacent to the JW Marriott's Rockwood Grill (74-855 Country Club Drive, Palm Desert, 760.341.2211) and lends a surreal sheen to the Santa Rosa Mountains. This is an idyllic setting in which to savor one of Chef Leonel De Leon's fall dishes incorporating pear or butternut squash. Think pan-roasted lobster tail with butternut squash gnocchi paired with a California chardonnay.

Bistro 60 (60151 Trilogy Parkway, Ste. 1, La Quinta, 760.501.0620) was recently included in Open Table's Top 100 Best Dining View Restaurants in the United States and for good reason. Casual diners can sit on the patio overlooking the manicured greens and feel right at home with the golfers. For fall, Chef Luis Arroyo will be serving up veal chop, venison and other wild-game specials, as well as entrees highlighting foie gras and Kumiai oysters. Daily prix fixe menus are offered at three price levels alongside homemade pizzas piled with your choice of toppings. Taco Tuesdays are wildly popular with local crowds as is the nightly live entertainment. bistro60.com

La Quinta Resort & Club (49499 Eisenhower Drive, La Quinta, 760.564.7600) boasts seven restaurants but three are of particular note in delivering that delicious feeling for fall.

Morgan's In The Desert

Star-shaped lanterns grace the trees lining the back patio at Morgan's In The Desert, where dim lights flicker in unison with the flames from classic stone fire pits. A farm-to-table menu by Chef de Cuisine Tamara Becerra takes advantage of seasonal ingredients indigenous to the Coachella Valley. The restaurant is noted for its Food Festivals, which are three-course dinners offered for two-week periods that revolve around singular ingredients. For fall, this includes apples, shrimp and scallops, squab and pumpkin, and duck and pear. For Christmas, it will be all about the white truffle. For a perfect nightcap, order the hot-spiced, vodka-infused apple cider with a twisted chocolate s'more. morgansinthedesert.com

TWENTY6

TWENTY6 provides a laid-back bistro setting overlooking a peaceful waterfall, perfect for breakfast or lunch. A more modern, health-oriented menu will appear for the season focusing on grains and greens, but a classic pairing of cold wine and signature crab cakes is always a crowd pleaser on the patio. Morning bellinis come in three refreshing flavors: peach, berry and lemon. laquintaresort.com/dine/twenty6/

Adobe Grill

Enjoy a beautiful sunset on a crisp evening at Adobe Grill, which overlooks the heart of the resort. Here you'll find guacamole made fresh tableside, hearty margaritas and signature horchata alongside scrumptious Mexican favorites with an upscale flair. Mary's farm chicken mole is infamous as are the camarones with fideo. Fall desserts will include a luscious tres leches or traditional flan. laquintaresort.com/dine/adobe-grill/

Evolution of the Boxster

By Aaron Atwood

The fortunes of Porsche turned on this engineering marvel

While this magazine celebrates its 20th anniversary, it seems fitting that we look to another icon that's celebrating a similar milestone. Twenty years ago, a car was born that would save a company. The Porsche Boxster pulled the company from the pit, on the shoulders of a six-cylinder powerhouse.

In the early 1990s, Porsche was selling fewer than 5,000 units in the United States. The company's production costs were soaring and bloated in comparison to the lean manufacturing of Japanese automakers. Then the 986 and 996 Boxster raced onto the scene with the positioning that every upstart professional desired: affordable legitimacy. The simple, naturally aspirated flat-six engines were fast and the roadster design shouted, "Fun to drive!"

Despite irking some Porsche purists, the Boxster showed that the company could compete with Mazda's Miata and fashion a new product that was distinctly German. The mid-engine innovation made for internal problems at Porsche, however; it was almost too good.

The most delicate issue for the sports-car manufacturer was the simple fact that a stock 911 was only tenths of a second faster in the quarter mile than the Boxster, while costing $10,000 more. For two decades, the company has walked a tightrope to keep the Boxster in its proper place behind its more elite brothers.

The "every man" nature of the Boxster also caused some brand confusion. In fact, a 2002 episode of The Sopranos called the Boxster "a Porsche with panties." Insults aside, the Boxster was saving the German giant. In 2013, Porsche was making more money per unit than any other automaker. While shareholders laughed all the way to the bank, competitors raced to keep up. In 1999, Honda released the S2000 roadster, touting it as the most affordable, fastest production car on the market. Seventeen years later, the Boxster is still going while the S2000 has long since been relegated to a once was.

Competition made the Boxster better. By 2007, the Boxster was squarely in the headlights of the sports car market. Porsche engineers took cues from enthusiasts clamoring for more power. The Boxster S, released that year, boasted 241 horsepower. By 2009, the Boxster was flaunting 310 horsepower in a 3.4-liter, flat-six engine. The 2012 Boxster GTS upped the game again with 330 horses. The cherry on top all the models was undoubtedly the 2013 Spyder, which took the best of the Carrera and the 911 in steering and braking while increasing horsepower to 375 and offering a top speed of 180 mph.

The 2017 Boxster will see a new design. Gone is the legacy flat-six engine that growled with such confidence it defined the sound of a sports car. In response to demands for better gas mileage and lower emissions, a four-cylinder will take its place. In true Porsche fashion, engineers have conjured 350 horsepower out of the turbo-charged, flat-four engine for the 917 Boxster S model.

All that power in such a small engine will provide torque out of this world. And a top speed of 177 mph is nothing to turn your nose up at. The redesign puts the 0-60 time at 4.0 seconds, on par with previous models but still making it slower than the 911 Turbo and Cayman GT. As the saying goes, the more things change, the more they stay the same.

A base model 917 Boxster will retail for around $56,000, making it reachable for this year's up-and-comer and those afflicted with mid-life crisis. The Boxster S will see a price tag of around $68,000—a nice anniversary present if we do say so ourselves.

Coachella Valley residents, strap yourselves in for the smoothest ride of your life. It will forever transform the way you travel. Tesloop rideshare service has been operating with routes between Los Angeles, Orange County and Las Vegas for the past year and has now launched in the Coachella Valley.

Travelers can take a deluxe one-way or round-trip ride to or from Palm Springs in a Tesla Model S or Model X, depending on the route. As if the falcon-wing doors and the privilege of being driven in one of Elon Musk's iconic creations with wheels aren't enough, passengers experience the city-to-city travel service in semi-autonomous electric vehicles while enjoying such amenities such as free Wi-Fi, phone charging, snacks, beverages, curated music selections, noise-cancelling headphones and a choice of comfy napping pillows.

The driving force, so to speak, behind Tesloop is 16-year-old Haydn Sonnad, whose germ of an idea has led to an innovative new transportation company that is convenient, economical and sustainable. Haydn's father, Rahul Sonnad, co-founded the business and is Tesloop's hands-on and personable CEO. Haydn says, "Our goal is to create the best mass-transit system in the world while providing travelers an alternative to burning fossil fuels and creating air pollution."

Haydn, whose official title is chief evangelism officer and founder, conceived of Tesloop while developing a strategy to procure and finance a vehicle for his summer vacation. After questioning Elon Musk, Tesla Motors' co-founder, CEO and product architect, about Autopilot functionality at the 2015 Tesla shareholders meeting, Haydn decided to found Tesloop as a company. Haydn currently focuses on corporate communications and public relations for the business while also managing car maintenance and equipment.

The company is moving along in the fast lane. CEO Rahul Sonnad has been active in technology and startups since the 1990s. In 2000, he founded his first startup, thePlatform, which offered an industrial-strength online video management system. This became the back-end for services by Verizon, Microsoft, Hulu, Qualcomm and Comcast, which acquired the company in 2006 for over $100 million. Rahul's next company, Geodelic, offered a location-based content discovery and mobile commerce service that was adopted by Verizon, Universal Studios Theme Parks and Korea Telecom.

Before startups, Rahul worked as an engineering manager at Adobe and at Microsoft, first as a product designer for Microsoft Word and later as the research and development manager for all the Asian versions of Microsoft office, a $1 billion suite of products. He attended Harvard Business School's MBA program and received a master's degree in computer science and Japanese from the University of Washington, after earning a bachelor of science in anthropology from the University of Pennsylvania.

On the evolution of Tesloop, Rahul says, "We started by putting people in a Tesla, giving them food and drink and treating them nicely. We realized this formula was working when we started seeing one five-star review after another."

Currently, the vehicles are operated by "pilots" who undergo a series of thorough screenings, background checks, training and random drug testing. Three or four passengers share the ride, and prices per person range from $39 to $129 one way for the Las Vegas routes and $29 to $69 for the Palm Springs routes. Tesloop has dozens of convenient pick-up and drop-off points in each city it services.

Thanks to funding from Clearstone Ventures, as well as angels from Tesla Motors and Facebook, Tesloop has been growing steadily. Rahul and his team calculate that costs will decrease as the need for pilots is eliminated with full-vehicle automation over the next two to three years.

"The Palm Springs area is amazing," Rahul says. "However, aside from driving oneself, it can be quite inconvenient to simply get in and out. Tesloop solves that by providing a transportation system that makes people happy and respects the planet."

As Tesloop begins to expand in its newest market of Palm Springs and the Coachella Valley, Rahul says, "Our goal is to offer incredible value to passengers, take vehicles off the road and create good will. Basically, everyone wins."

Game On!

Define your style starting at tee-off

By Diane Marlin-Dirkx

SwingDish

SwingDish

Whether you're known as an enthusiastic duffer, inspired amateur or experienced professional, your distinct personality is a driving force on the golf course from the first tee-off to the last putt on No. 18.

Believe it or not, research shows that a lot of that personality is defined by what we choose to wear while in the game. Unlike in other sports, golfers do not don uniforms. Instead, they choose from a wide range of apparel made specifically for the game of golf.

Golf is a glorious game with a well-documented fashion history, from centuries ago when knickers were all the rage to knock-knee displays under shorts of varying lengths seen today. Through the ages, golf fashion has evolved—flannel trousers in the 1930s, knits in the 1940s, cardigans and Eisenhower jackets and now, today, a range of high-performance fabrics that keep players cool, comfortable and looking stylish.

Every player has a strategy for winning, and more than one golfing great has made a statement with memorable fashion displays, from Sir Walter Hagen and Arnold Palmer to Payne Stewart, John Daly, Rickie Fowler, Paula Creamer and Ian Poulter, among others. But making a fashion statement isn't just for the pros. With today's exciting color palettes and trending styles, letting personality shine through on the course is for everyone.

This is especially true for golfing women, who are in for a treat this year as fall brings on the latest golfing fashions. Summer has taken its last hike until next year and for golfers in the desert, fall is the most glorious season of all. Fall is a riot of color, a quilt tailored by nature: glossy emerald green leaves on evergreens and those waiting to take their turn at the paintbrush. Trees splashed in warm rust, umber, orange and rust, or cloaked in fiery crimson, gold, or deep purple, rich blues the sky never new, re-veined with a feathery brush.

To add to all the newness, retailers have circled the rounders, stocked the shelves and set hangers with the fashions that will help define personalities for the next round.

"Advancing the fashion of golf one ruffle at a time" is the motto of a new company doing just that, its latest lines available at Lady Golf, The Fashion Store. Owner/designer, Ashley Tucker-Dyer started FlirTee Golf after growing tired of the lack of clothing options offered to female golfers. "I had a desire to wear something fashionable and functional while golfing," says the fervent golfer who lives with her family in Edmond, Oklahoma. "FlirTee Golf will allow you to transition seamlessly from the course to the 19th hole, confident about your game and your wardrobe. Cheers to the new generation of women's golf apparel," she adds.

Another label making a feminine statement at Lady Golf is Swingdish, a luxury women's golf apparel brand both functional and feminine. Designer Tricia Covell and her daughters Krystal and Shelley launched the line aimed at women of all ages who are "fashion-conscious with independent spirits and a taste for revolutionary designs." Covell says Swingdish was created in part to fill the major void in golf apparel for older women who, like her, have a love for fashion and for the game of golf. Each Swingdish piece is infused with a story. All pieces are luxurious, individualistic and timeless, creating a sentimental place in your wardrobe.

It's game on for fall! You're not still wearing kitten-pad pale pink shorts and pastel stripes as you tee-off, are you? Don't sell your personality profile short, white-ball warrior. You're out to win and to do it in style!

Black and White and Pink All Over

Creating colorful expressions of personality

By Alison Elsner

The use of color in jewelry, fashion, art and life is a powerful way to elicit a variety of responses. Far beyond simple visual impact, color inspires humans in ways that can determine emotions or actions. No one color will have the same effect on everyone, with results depending on context as well as personal preferences, experiences, upbringing and cultural differences.

BULGARI

Black is the absence of color and white is the blending of all colors together. When black and white are combined, they represent the harmony achieved through contrast as well as sophistication and elegant simplicity.

Bulgari's Divas' Dream cuff bracelet is a stunning juxtaposition of black and white contrasts, softened against a backdrop of 18K pink gold. The wrist piece features two carved fan-shaped stations, one in black onyx and the other in mother-of-pearl. They're joined together by a delicious pink gold band that is hinged at the back. This handmade creation goes for $6,650.

The coordinating Bulgari Divas' Dream drop earrings hang two inches from the lobe and feature fan-shaped drops of mother-of-pearl contrasted with a striking black onyx fan, all set in 18K pink gold. This pair has post backs and sells for $4,250.

Completing a trio, the Bulgari Divas' Dream necklace is a concoction of 18K pink gold with 12 elegantly carved black onyx and mother-of-pearl fan-shaped stations. Measuring just over 16 inches, this piece retails for $7,200.

Bulgari's Divas' Dream collection also features other stunning pieces that position pink gold as the main attraction. The Bulgari Divas' Dream drop earrings in high-polished 18K pink gold inspire a sense of beautiful balance with 50 sparkling pavé-set diamonds (.96 tcw). Just over an inch long, these fan shaped delicacies are available for $5,750.

Transitioning to a floral theme, Bulgari's Divas' Dream flower earrings celebrate the lustrous, shiny 18K pink gold sensuously shaped into petals with clusters of pavé diamonds (3.66 tcw) surrounding one round diamond. These retail for $16,200.

The 18K pink gold also holds its own in the Bulgari Divas' Dream flower ring. The curves and undulations of the gold petals are accented with 117 round brilliant-cut diamonds (3.15 tcw). The ring measures just shy of one inch wide and may be purchased for $20,300.

TIFFANY & CO.

Pink is the color of universal love. The energy in pink combines white, which represents the potential for fullness, with red, which represents the force that develops that potential.

Pink gemstones have long been known for generating feelings of caring, tenderness, self-worth, love, acceptance, order and protection from aggression.

The Tiffany Soleste collection offers wearers a selection of spectacular pink gems. The gentle pink palettes balance the bold stone configurations and geometric shapes of the collection.

The Tiffany Soleste pink tourmaline ring features a double row of round, brilliant diamonds (.49 tcw) surrounding a splendid pink tourmaline (2.91 tcw), which takes on a rich, light pink tone, especially in its platinum setting. The price is $7,400.

Tiffany Soleste pink sapphire earrings showcase a rich pink hue with round pink sapphires (.80 tcw) encircled by round, brilliant, white diamonds (.18 tcw). They are available for $6,400.

Shifting the spectrum a bit, the Tiffany Soleste pink diamond ring presents a halo of white and fancy vivid pink diamonds, which together lend radiance to a sparkling white diamond center stone. Round brilliant diamonds (.34 tcw), selected and set by hand to maximize their brilliance, are set in 18K rose gold. The effect of the pink diamonds (.02 tcw) positioned against the rose gold almost makes the ring appear to have multiple shades of pink peeking through. The ring retails for $6,200.

A similar design is found in the Tiffany Soleste pink diamond pendant. A white diamond center stone shares its radiance when embraced by one row of white diamonds (.23 tcw) and one row of petite, fancy pink diamonds (.03 tcw). Nestled among a platinum and 18K rose gold setting, the result is once again an impression of various shades of pink. The pendant rests on a 16-inch platinum chain and sells for $4,050.

Evoking the image of a colorful piece of candy, the Tiffany Soleste pink diamond band ring can be worn as an engagement symbol or a fashion statement. In this alluring design, a confident row of fancy vivid pink diamonds is framed by two rows of brilliant white diamonds, all perfectly rounded (together .48 tcw). Set in gleaming 18K rose gold, this design is available for $14,500.

Maybe the sweetest confection of all is the Tiffany diamond and pink sapphire heart pendant, part of the Tiffany Hearts collection. The centerpiece of this lovely necklace is outlined in the shape of a heart, with round pink sapphires (1.25 tcw) and round brilliant diamonds (1.00 tcw) set in platinum. The pendant hangs on a 16-inch platinum chain and may be purchased for $6,300.

As long as you wear them and don't nibble them, any of these exquisite pieces will reinforce your personality and perspective through creative use of color. What a delightful way to communicate your own vibrancy to the world!
