This issue we are proud to feature one of the desert's own. Although he grew up in southern California, Carson Daly has deep roots in the Coachella Valley. He has family here, and his mother, Patty Daly Caruso, is a celebrity in the Palm Springs marketplace in her own right, having hosted her own television talk show for more than 15 years. Daly is also an excellent golfer. He was once junior player of the year at Riviera Golf Club in Los Angeles where his stepfather worked, and he later won a golf scholarship to Loyola Marymount. Daly is currently host of NBC's enormously successful show The Voice, and he can often be found on the celebrity golf circuit. He recently took time out of his busy schedule to talk with Desert Golf Magazine, and you can read all about it in our cover story starting on pg. 12.

We also hear from our resident golf course architect Clive Clarke, esteemed designer of Eagle Falls at Fantasy Springs, The Classic Course at Indian Wells Resort and The Clive Clarke Course at The Hideaway. In this issue, he takes a look at one of the desert's most admired private communities, Bighorn Golf Club. Developer R.D. Hubbard's playground features two championship layouts, one by Tom Fazio and the other by Arthur Hills. Clarke profiles both courses as well as the facilities, starting on pg. 16.

Desert Golf Magazine is a longtime supporter of charity golf events in the desert region, bringing them to the attention of readers whom we hope will be inspired to participate and/or contribute to the many worthy causes. Front and center this month is Solid Rock Foundation's Alice Cooper Rock and Roll Golf Classic. Alice Cooper and his wife, Cheryl, continue to raise hundreds of thousands of dollars for their projects aiding at-risk teens in the Phoenix area, including The Rock at 32nd Street Teen Center, which opened in the spring of 2012. Find out how to play in this fun and worthy event on pg. 24.

I would like to take a moment to thank everyone for their support of the ChildHelp Celebrity Invitational this year, hosted by Cheryl Ladd and John O'Hurley. As tournament director, I was extremely proud to work with Judy Jensen and the Indian Wells Chapter team to help with the fundraising and corporate image of this amazing organization. I look forward to another year of this event that has already contributed more than $800,000 to a worthy organization. Our gala featured singer LeAnn Rimes, and after her performance this year, I will forever be a fan.

Please support these charities. The ChildHelp, Barbara Sinatra Children's Center and Patrick Warburton St. Jude events do amazing work for women and children in need; with funds hard to come by in today's challenging times, these charity golf events are a major source of income that keep these critical programs and services running.

As things warm up in the coming months, keep in mind that our golf-course conditions are simply better than anywhere else in the nation. Get out and play and enjoy the remainder of the season.

Carson Daly

In His Own Voice

The successful TV personality is a low-handicapper with roots in the desert

"I'm jealous of my sister," admits Carson Daly with a laugh. As incredulous as this may sound from the popular radio and TV personality, he has good reason. "I'm jealous because she has relocated with her family to the desert to live full-time. I can easily see myself doing that also," he adds, surely to the delight of his parents, Pattie Daly Caruso and Richard Caruso, longtime Coachella Valley residents.

If the name Carson Daly is only vaguely familiar, you aren't in sync with of-the-moment TV. Daly is the former host of MTV's Total Request Live and current host of the wildly successful televised singing competition The Voice. As ecstatic and amazed as Daly is with the success of The Voice, it's his long-running late-night show, Last Call with Carson Daly, that's his baby. The show, which premiered in 2002 and airs weeknights at 1:30 a.m., turned Daly into one of the longest tenured hosts in late-night television.

A California native, Daly grew up in Santa Monica. Grateful that his stepfather, Richard, introduced him to the game of golf as a young boy, Daly was truly bit by the golf bug in high school, where he became a star player on the Santa Monica High School golf team. After graduating in 1991, Daly continued to hone his game in the Coachella Valley, after moving here to attend College of the Desert. In fact, there was a time when he had aspirations of becoming a Tour player.

Daly with Mother Pattie Daly Caruso and Richard Caruso

"I tried to qualify for the U.S. Open at Ironwood when I was out here and playing well. I had a disastrous hole, and I think that was the turning point for me. I would have tried on the then Nike Tour, probably given it a shot, tried to play a few events, see how it would have gone. I would have like to have done something. But we'll never know."

What we do know is that Daly has worked diligently in the entertainment business and achieved success and popularity. Humble and appreciative of his life, he quips, "I've never had more invites to golf tournaments."

These days, he continues to be passionate about the game and plays as much as possible, often in the Coachella Valley. "January and February are when I'm able to play the most," he says. "The rest of the year is crazy busy."

A past winner of the former Bob Hope Chrysler Classic Pro Am, Daly returned to the desert this year for the Humana Challenge Pro Am. He is happy with all of the changes made to the tournament and with the focus on health and wellness. "It was an honor to be asked back by Humana and the Clinton Foundation; being in the desert holds such great memories for me."

Daly believes adamantly that the game of golf helps build strong character. "I like to think I'm a decent person; really, a lot of the things that I learned were from playing the game of golf, so making those correlations between life and golf is very important to do when you're young. You've got to sit back and let somebody else go first sometimes; there are some great lessons in there."

At this time Daly does not belong to a country club, but GMs take note: "I'm open for celebrity memberships from anyone who wants to give me one," Daly laughs. Perhaps his phone is already ringing with offers.

It seems to be a little-known fact that Daly and his father played a lot of junior golf with Earl and Tiger Woods, and that's what comes to mind when the TV star is asked who would make up his ultimate foursome. "I have such great memories of playing golf in my youth; I have to have my dad in there, that's for sure. And I remember playing in a Father/Son tournament with Earl and Tiger. We had so much fun playing junior golf in Southern California, so I'm going to say my dad, Tiger and Earl. Both of our fathers were very instrumental to us on and off the course; I know how much Earl meant to Tiger."

Daly can be found nightly on television and daily on the radio. He's also a founding partner of 456 Entertainment, an independent record label, and hosts the annual special, New Year's Eve with Carson Daly. He and his girlfriend, Siri Pinter, are the proud parents of two children.

The entertainer would be the first one to agree that life is good. With a successful career, a single-digit handicap in golf and the ability to lead life to the fullest, Daly doesn't take more than two seconds to respond when asked to describe his life in one sentence. "I don't know if you can print this, but I'm the luckiest bastard alive!"

Bighorn Golf Club

Those searching for that legendary desert lifestyle need look no further

Canyons Course Hole 18

By Clive Clark

In 1492, Italian explorer Christopher Columbus acquired a galleon and set sail from Spain, crossing the Atlantic in search of the East Indies. What he discovered instead was the Americas.

In 1990, R. D. Hubbard set sail in search of joining a golf club in the Coachella Valley. What he discovered was Bighorn Golf Club, where he became the seventh member and acquired two lots. Nothing extraordinary about that, you might say; however, after five years Bighorn Golf Club still had only 50 members, and the developer, Westinghouse, decided to sell.

Hubbard's interest in purchasing the property was probably less than lukewarm, but as prices continued to soften, he gathered a few homeowners and purchased the club. "Our only interest was to protect our property investment," he says. "We really didn't expect to make any money out of the deal."

How things change. If you asked Dee Hubbard today, he would say, "It's probably the best investment I ever made." But that investment didn't come from sitting on his hands and hoping that a few more members might join.

Canyons Course Hole 6

Instead, he saw the big picture, supporting it with a long-term vision. First, he acquired more land. Then he invited famed architect Tom Fazio to come in and design the Canyons course. It was a brilliant move that produced a 36-hole, high-end residential development on an amazing site just a few minutes' drive from Palm Desert's restaurants, shops and nightlife, as well as El Paseo, the Rodeo Drive of the Coachella Valley.

The Bighorn of today is very different from the Bighorn of 1996. The Club has earned an extraordinary reputation as one of the world's most luxurious golf-course communities, offering not only 36 holes of exciting golf surrounded by spectacular residences, but also an abundance of amenities.

Mountain Course Hole 4

Among them: a world-class spa and wellness center; seven dining venues, including the Canyons Steak House; The Marketplace, a boutique market with a Starbucks coffee bar and wireless Internet service; The Pour House and Golf House restaurants; the Golf Learning Center; a thriving tennis program; bocce courts; numerous parks; private transportation services; and over 100 seasonal events.

But what really sets Bighorn apart? It all comes back to Hubbard's vision. Carl Cardinali, vice president of development for the club, says, "R.D. Hubbard has created an exceptional community focused on lifestyle with world-renowned amenities, prompting investment and support by owners and members, all without assessments to the members."

When asked what he considers to be the key to Bighorn's massive success, Hubbard echoes Cardinali's statement. "Last year alone the real estate sales were around $150 million. The range of amenities offered by Bighorn has made this possible. It takes time to develop these amenities, all of which combine to create a legendary lifestyle."

One of the most noticeable amenities is the spectacular Canyons Steak House, which offers gourmet cuisine in an architecturally stunning venue with panoramic views of the entire valley. For a second, the astute developer in Hubbard is apparent as he adds, "You know, this restaurant is situated on two very expensive lots!"

As successful as the club has become, no one at Bighorn is resting on laurels. Next on the horizon is an exciting addition, The Vault. This building will be fronted by a massive fascia, which will resemble a king-size vault that one might find in a bank. However, this vault will not be filled with dollar bills and bullion. Instead, the ground floor will accommodate members' exotic and classic cars, while the mezzanine floor will house a lounge gallery where members can enjoy light snacks and cocktails while taking in a view of the cars below—and, I daresay, a few of the owners adding a final touch of polish to their precious possessions.

Golf remains integral to the club. The first golf course at Bighorn, the Mountains course, was designed by Arthur Hills in 1989. Hills had a breathtaking canvas of natural desert and mountains with huge changes in elevation. In the early days of the Mountains course, the front nine was considered challenging. Under the new ownership, this nine was softened, and the nines were also reversed in order to get golfers away to a good start. The front nine today comprises spectacular desert golf on relatively soft inclines. The terrain on the back nine is akin to a roller coaster, offering some incredible holes. One hole in particular has a tee featuring a 200-foot drop to the fairway below. Talk about hang time! The view of the valley and surrounding majestic mountains from these elevated perches is a highlight of each round.

The Fazio-designed Canyons course offers a completely different ambience. Within the desert setting and rugged terrain, each hole unfolds in dramatic and memorable fashion. The shot values, elements of risk and reward and breathtaking beauty are some of the reasons the Canyons course is of championship caliber.

It should not be overlooked, however, that there is more to country clubs and lifestyle than just golf. Hubbard himself is a philanthropist held in high esteem among his peers. Apart from his own foundations, he has been a catalyst in encouraging the members of Bighorn to support local charities of the Coachella Valley, many of which have greatly benefited by the generosity emanating from the club. Members support a wide variety of nonprofits, including those focused on our wounded warriors, schools and educational scholarships, the arts, and wellness issues, including donations exceeding $31 million to the Eisenhower Medical Center in support of the Bighorn Radiation Oncology Center and Lucy Curci Cancer Center.

Clive Clark and Jerry Weintraub

Bighorn is also a club where one may run into a celebrity or two. Members include such luminaries as Goldie Hawn, Kurt Russell, Pete Sampras, Mary Hart and the infamous Jerry Weintraub, producer of many successful movies, including The Karate Kid and the Ocean's 11 series. I've often played golf with Jerry and also enjoyed reading his recent book with the engaging title, When I Stop Talking, You'll Know I'm Dead! His latest movie, about to go into production, is Tarzan.

Alas, I fear that in spite of my friendship and well-toned physique, I will not be getting the lead role!

Judy Vossler, Arnold Palmer, Joe Walser, Jr. and Ernie Vossler (1928-2013)

Saying Good-bye to Ernie Vossler

One of the Coachella Valley's greats is gone but definitely not forgotten

By Christine Loomis

There's a solid argument to be made that the Coachella Valley wouldn't be the top-tier golf destination it is today if not for Ernie Vossler—maybe not even a top-tier destination at all.

Vossler died in February at his home in La Quinta, Calif., at the age of 87. He is survived by his wife, Marlene Hagge-Vossler, a memorable golfer in her own right. She was a 26-time LPGA winner and one of the founders of the women's tour.

Ernie Vossler is gone, but he surely won't be forgotten in the Coachella Valley where his work, passion and love of golf live on in the many preeminent developments he helped launch onto the world stage, including La Quinta Resort, PGA West, Westin Mission Hills Resort and Mission Hills Country Club.

Vossler and longtime business partner Joe Walser, Jr., who together formed Unique Golf Concepts in 1971, are credited with being among the very first developers to astutely use television to market properties, a strategy that put the Coachella Valley in front of millions of people when they brought the made-for-TV Skins Game to PGA West for six years starting in 1986. They also helped bring the Bob Hope Classic to PGA West, giving the resort legions of instant fans.

Aftab Dada, general manager of the Hilton Palm Springs Resort and board member of the Greater Palm Springs Convention & Visitors Bureau, called Vossler a pioneer of the Coachella Valley.

"Ernie and his family really put the Coachella Valley on the world map as far as golf," he said in a Feb. 18 article in The Press-Enterprise. "It's what attracted all the wealth, the investors, the country clubs—the rest is history."

But Vossler and Walser, who died last year, didn't just create magic in the California desert. When Landmark Land Company purchased Unique Golf Concepts in 1974, the duo continued their successful brand of land acquisitions, master-planned golf-community development and resort operations, and soon achieved broad national recognition. Ultimately, Vossler established Landmark Golf in 1992, adding Johnny Potts to the team along with Walser.

Among the communities and clubs that Vossler and his partners helped to create are Marsh Island Golf Club in Mississippi, the Cardinal Club in North Carolina, Carmel Valley Ranch Resort in California, Palm Beach Polo and Country Club in Florida, Kiawah Island Inn and Golf Resort in South Carolina and, of course, Oak Tree Golf Club in Oklahoma, from which Landmark's well-known oak tree logo came. Farther afield, they also helped develop two of the 12 courses at courses at Mission Hills in Guan Lan Town, Shenzhen, China—the Nick Faldo Course and the Jumbo Ozaki Course.

It's not surprising that in August of 1997, Golf Illustrated described Vossler and Walser as "two of the most important golf developers in the world."

More poignantly, Jim Woodward, teaching pro at Oak Tree who took his first golf lesson from Vossler when he was just 13, said of his mentor and Walser, "You would never meet two finer gentlemen."

Development was a natural progression for Vossler, who started winning at golf back in high school in Fort Worth, Texas. It was there that he also began a lifelong friendship with fellow teammate Dan Jenkins, a Sports Illustrated journalist whom Larry King once called "the best sportswriter in America."

Vossler went on to the PGA Tour, thanks to personal letters of recommendation from Byron Nelson and Ben Hogan, who was his idol. He won five times on the Tour between 1955 and 1962 before opting to provide more stability for his family as head golf professional at Quail Creek Golf and Country Club in Oklahoma City. That decision paid off. In 1967, he was named PGA Professional of the Year for his outstanding abilities as a golf club operator and teaching professional.

Teaching remained one of Vossler's passions, and many of his students went on to achieve great success on the PGA Tour, Champions Tour and LPGA Tour.

The word that most often comes up when people describe Ernie Vossler is visionary, a befitting description of a man who developed and marketed golf courses and real estate communities in a way no one before him had. He understood the value of branding long before that now ubiquitous word was even in the vernacular for corporations or marketers.

But he also understood the value of relationships, and he often put those as priorities above all else. In doing so, he proved that business success doesn't mean abandoning family or devaluing friendships for corporate expediency (a lesson many on Wall Street didn't learn). He was the kind of person who seemed to naturally develop relationships that lasted a lifetime, and those may have been his greatest wealth. In addition to Jenkins, his longtime friends included a who's who of the golfing world—Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus, Pete Dye, Mark McCormack, Deane Beman, Harvey Pennick and, of course, Johnny Pott and Joe Walser, Jr.—as well as celebrities such as actor Robert Wagner, who served on Landmark's advisory board.

Arnold Palmer, Marlene Hagge-Vossler, Jack Nicklaus and Ernie Vossler

He also brought all five of his children into business with him, which daughter Judy Vossler says is one of the things that he was most proud of in his life. Today, Judy is senior vice president with the Greater Palm Springs Convention & Visitors

Bureau and Andy is chief executive of Landmark Golf in Indian Wells, Calif., the company he joined back in the 1990s.

Landmark Golf will remain a force in the Coachella Valley and far beyond. "He was very proud of the Landmark master-planned communities that so many people could enjoy," says Judy Vossler of her dad. "He cherished the network of golf professionals and employees he gathered around him."

And they cherished him.

It's hard to sum up a man's life in one article, and definitely so for Ernie Vossler. He had so many talents, so many accomplishments, so many stories to tell, so many amazing relationships.

"People who knew him don't feel they can boil his life down to quotes or stories," says longtime friend and Coachella Valley resident Arthur Jacobson. "He was bigger than that, bigger than one story."

No doubt, there will be many more to come.

Alice Cooper's

2013 Rock and Roll Golf Classic

The 16th annual Golf Classic will raise money for The Rock at 32nd Street Teen Center, a safe haven for Phoenix teenagers.

Alice Cooper is a man of many talents. A Rock and Roll Hall of Famer, the pioneer of shock rock still records music and tours throughout the United States. His energy and charisma on the stage is as noticeable now as it was 40 years ago when he first introduced fans to his unusual stage sets, from electric chairs to boa constrictors.

He also hosts his own nationally broadcast radio show each week, Nights with Alice Cooper, and has appeared in movies such as Wayne's World and Scream, as well as a variety of television shows including Monk and That '70s Show. When he's not acting or writing and recording his music, he can typically be found on a golf course. With a handicap ranging from 4 to 6, he tries to play at least 18 holes, six days a week.

But his greatest life passion is serving others.

Since 1995, Cooper has overseen Solid Rock Foundation, a faith-based organization dedicated to Phoenix's underprivileged, at-risk teenagers. Originally, Cooper and co-founder Chuck Savale envisioned a foundation that would raise money for local youth charities. However, they soon realized the community's teens needed a refuge, a place where they could escape drugs and violence.

In May 2012, Cooper fulfilled this need by opening The Rock at 32nd Street Teen Center, a collaboration between Solid Rock and Phoenix-based Genesis Church. A facility dedicated to the performing arts, The Rock ministers to teenagers while educating them on various aspects of music and dance.

"We provide free music and dance classes to teens aged 12 to 19," says Jeff Moore, executive director, Solid Rock Foundation.

Solid Rock's dancers with Director of Dance, Hodgie Joe

"This spring, we are also launching vocational training programs in audio, lighting and staging."

The Rock offers 45-minute-long classes five days a week, with topics ranging from guitar and drums to ballet and tumbling. Cooper and his team hope to eventually add a recording and sound room so that teenagers can rehearse, record and mix music.

Even if teenagers are not interested in performing arts, they are welcomed at The Rock's Teen Room, where they can socialize and play pool and video games. A computer lab will also be finalized this year so the teens can complete homework assignments, study for tests and learn new computer skills in a comfortable environment.

To raise funds for The Rock and its future projects, Cooper will be partnering with Scottsdale's Airpark Dodge Ram Chrysler Jeep to host the 16th annual Rock and Roll Golf Classic.

For the second consecutive year, the Classic will be contested at the Robert Trent Jones Jr.-designed Las Sendas Golf Club, which is nestled in the Utery Mountains. The 6,914-yard par-71 layout is well respected for its narrow fairways and 73.1 rating, yet also cherished for its exquisite views and serenity.

Alice with the 2011 Golf Classic winners

"I'm a long-time member at Las Sendas, so it's a perfect fit," Cooper says.

This year the Classic will be extended to two days, April 21-22, reminiscent of the early years of the tournament. On April 21, guests will compete in a skins game practice round, providing them with more time to relish the natural beauty of Las Sendas. Afterward, they will attend a cocktail party and live auction, enjoy a three-course meal prepared by Las Sendas chefs and witness a concert performance by the shock-rock master himself, Alice Cooper.

While guests are playing in the skins game, Cooper's wife Sheryl will be hosting an inaugural ladies event: The Rock Runway Fashion and Trunk Show. "The ladies will also be treated to cocktails and a wine-and-cheese reception," says Moore.

The following day, 132 amateur golfers will mingle at a continental breakfast prepared by the Las Sendas chefs. After an 8:30 a.m. shotgun start, they will compete for the Classic's grand prizes, custom leather jackets, which are awarded to the winning foursome (a salute to the Augusta National Golf Club's green jackets).

Since the tournament's inception, Cooper has invited his celebrity friends to participate, from Meat Loaf to Dennis Hopper. This year's list of attendees includes celebrities such as actors Daniel Baldwin and John O'Hurley, comedian Bill Engvall and legendary football player Dick Butkus.

"This tournament has three main purposes," notes Moore. "To provide fellowship, have fun and ensure that Solid Rock has a fruitful future. We want to continue to provide teens a safe place where they can express themselves through music, dance and self-expression."

"Solid Rock's mission is to make a difference and help teens change their lives," says Cooper. "It's all about the teens."

HD PVR 2 Gaming Edition

One of my favorite video games is about to get its yearly update: Tiger Woods Golf by EA Sports. I've spent countless hours perfecting my game on Xbox, and unlike in real golf, I have had several holes-in-one on this system. Of course, it always happens when I am alone. Well the folks at Hauppauge have helped me share my success with my friends. The HD PVR 2 Gaming Edition can record high-definition video from my Xbox360 (PS3 or computer), which can then be easily shared on YouTube. Or you can create your own live-streaming channel. The cool thing is you can do this while playing and have no delay at all using the video-pass-through setting! Play your favorite game and share or review your best footage. A record button on top of the unit makes it easy to start and stop your recording. I envision a contest down the line to see who gets the first hole-in-one on Tiger Woods 14!! Check out all the specs at hauppauge.com

Bluetooth Sound Bar

The Pyle Audio 300 Watt Bluetooth Sound Bar is so cool that I had about 10 minutes to test it myself. After my 10 minutes of testing, I took a break, went upstairs and when I came down it was off the counter and in my 18-year-old son's room blasting away! This is a sound bar with built in FM tuner, able to read media through a USB or SD cards in addition to the standard audio RCA inputs. The USB and SD card input reads MP3 files as well as WMA format. You can also stream audio from any device with Bluetooth. This unit sounds great and delivers clear, crisp audio. The 300 watts of power and 8 Ohm subwoofer mean it can crank. Visit pyleaudio.com for all the technical specs.

Divoom Bluetune-solo

Another great little Bluetooth speaker is the Divoom Bluetune-solo. This is a portable Bluetooth speaker that you can take with you anywhere for great sound. What makes it unique is a built-in microphone, so you can use the device for conference calls or to take a call while listening to your favorite music. With just a touch of a button, the speaker becomes a two-way speakerphone. This small speaker (60mm round x 72mm high) puts out some great audio. I was actually shocked by how powerful this little six-watt speaker is. I can already see this sitting by the side of my pool this summer. Want more power? You can daisy chain additional Bluetune-solos to give you bigger sound. Probably the best feature is that it's rechargeable, which means you don't have to take a plug with you. Bluetooth connects from up to 30 feet away, making it perfect for on the patio or poolside, and it comes in a wide range of colors. divoomusa.com

SwingTIP

The SwingTIP is a golf-training tool designed to give you real-time feedback on your smartphone. SwingTIP clips onto your club and shows you what happened with your swing, why it happened and how to fix it. Because it weighs less than an ounce, most people can't even feel it on their club. Just turn it on, start up your mobile app and swing your club; the SwingTIP does the rest, providing instant feedback so you can correct any problems. swingtip.com

Golf's Common Threads

By Rob Stanger

To increase power and control distance, you must work from the ground up

The thing that golfers long for in their golf game is power! The practical result of that power is the ability to hit the ball farther, which is what every golfer wants to achieve.

Given that, the first thing to understand is that creating more power is no different than anything else that we do as human beings: To achieve it, it must be conditioned daily, in the same way that we go to the gym and slowly build up muscles. We start slowly and gradually build that power over time by challenging ourselves each day. Second, we need to understand where power is located inside the human body and how to tap into those power muscles in the golfswing.

Photos by Kenneth Malone

Finding the Power

The strongest muscles in the human body are located underneath us: glutes, hamstrings and quads. Yet a good majority of golfers do not utilize these power muscles in their golfswings.

A common flaw that I see among higher-handicap golfers is that their legs are quiet throughout the swing, forcing the upper body to try to compensate to generate power. By contrast, the common thread I see among the best golfers in the world is that they effectively utilize their power muscles to create a variety of power levels in their swing.

When it comes to golfswings, the three most powerful forces are leverage, gravity and centrifugal force or rotation. The goal in generating power in the swing is to have the ability to tap into these forces, not only to make the ball go farther but to control the distance the ball travels with greater precision. So how do we do that?

Storing Up Energy

In order to create energy, we must first store energy. It's a fundamental principle: For every action, there will be an opposite and equal reaction. This principle holds true in the golf swing. In fact, the golf swing is a series of causes and effects during which actions create reactions. What golf instructors try to do is help their students create the best sequence of motion in the swing (action) in order to produce the best result (reaction).

It's my belief that the sole purpose of the backswing is to store up energy by loading our legs as the upper body winds up. Since the muscles in the lower body are designed vertically, the only way to engage those lower-body muscles is to load them vertically or squat. This motion is no different than that of a tennis player loading his legs as he winds up to hit a winning forehand.

Releasing the Energy

Once the lower body is "loaded," it can use the ground as a lever to generate power. In my photos, you can see how I am using my legs to generate the appropriate amount of power for the desired distance. I engage my legs in the backswing by loading them as my shoulders wind up. This action puts me in a strong position to use the ground as a lever to release the energy in the forward swing.

Notice that I have loaded my legs equally in both the driver and iron swings; however, I utilize the ground at different power levels in the forward swing, depending on the club. In the iron swing, my right foot is lower to the ground through impact, therefore creating less power from leverage. In the driver swing, my right foot is higher through impact, which creates greater power.

The process is a chain reaction that starts in the ground and makes its way up through the legs, releasing rotational force provided by the hips with the shoulders instantly following.

This, in effect, is why the common thread of great golf swings is that the power works from the ground up, while the common flaw in poor golf swings is that the power works through the upper body from the top down.

Once you understand this, you can practice it daily and condition your body to act and react appropriately—in other words, achieve more power and control distance more effectively.

It's All in Your Head – Really

One key to improving your golf is improving self-confidence and self-efficacy

Nothing breeds confidence like prior success, but how do we accomplish this success? All golfers understand the importance of self-confidence. They must believe in their ability to meet the challenges of the task at hand each time they step up to the ball. Confidence, however, changes day-to-day and even shot to shot. It is easy to feel confident when things are going right; however, when performance is not at its best or the golfer is not experiencing success, confidence can be easily shaken.

Famous football coach Vince Lombardi once said, “Everyone is confident when they are winning. Real confidence occurs when athletes are losing but are still able to maintain self-belief, or when they learn from their failures or mistakes and move on.”

The Path to Confidence

Golfers who do not deal well with adversity or setbacks have a difficult time maintaining a positive mental attitude, which ultimately results in decreased performance. In the field of sports psychology, most of the research on self-confidence has been based on Stanford Professor Emeritus Albert Bandura's theory of self-efficacy, defined as “belief in one's capabilities to organize and execute the courses of action required to produce given attainments.”

For golfers, there are two elements of the research to consider. First, there are three types of sport-confidence: cognitive efficiency, resilience, and physical skills and training. All three of these are supported by nine sources of sport-confidence: demonstration of ability, mastery, social support, vicarious experience, coach's leadership, situational favorableness, environmental comfort, physical self-presentation, and physical/mental preparation.

Prior success is directly related to personal mastery and thought to be the greatest influence on self-confidence. Interestingly, the research shows striking differences between men and women. Men ultimately demonstrate higher levels of confidence, as they are more concerned with physical/mental preparation and winning. Research suggests that women are more concerned with self-presentation, environmental comfort and social support than their male counterparts, as well as personal goals and standards.

Research also consistently shown that solid skills can be overruled by self-doubts, causing even the most skilled individuals to perform poorly under circumstances that undermine their belief in themselves. You've seen that happen time and time again to top pros on Tour.

Important of Practicing Mental Skills

There are numerous factors that contribute to confidence or a lack of it. Having an understanding of these factors can help you maintain a positive mindset for performance.

Accomplished golfers attribute great performance to enhanced mental skills. However, most golfers fail to practice their mental skills in the same manner that they practice their physical skills. This could be due to a lack of motivation or understanding of how to implement mental practice. Yet mental skills are just as important, or even more important, to successful performance, and it's not as hard to practice them as one might think.

There are two strategies for improving mental skills: imagery and observational learning.

According to Bandura, “most human behavior is learned by observation through modeling.” When we are children, this comes naturally. We “watch and do.” But as we get older, we seem to have a need to try and cognitively understand what we are trying to accomplish. This is not always the best method for learning a motor skill, such as the golf swing.

Can-Do Strategy

Here's a strategy to try: Identify a professional golfer whose swing most resembles your desired swing. It could be the tempo or the style that you wish to model. Naturally, it should be a swing that is realistic to your abilities, one that you have assessed with your golf and fitness instructors.

Find a video of your model swing and watch it before you begin your practice session or your round. Watch the video as often as possible, especially just prior to executing your swing. Your goal is to try and visualize the model swing while executing your swing, as opposed to trying to process verbal or technical information.

The more you practice visualizing your desired swing, the better you will become at visualizing, and that ultimately should translate into better performance.

Show Me the Money

Start the home-loan process before you head out to buy in today's strengthening market

Rancho Las Palmas Country Club, Rancho Mirage

The lenders are lending, the buyers are buying and the sellers are selling. It looks like the real estate market is back on track. In the first few years of the recent recession, it was shockingly difficult to get a mortgage loan, especially in comparison to how easy it was in the mid 2000s. I am happy to report that the loan process, although tedious, is manageable and possible. There are programs for second homes, investment properties, Jumbo loans and foreign nationals. Amazingly enough, anyone who did a short sale on their home at least three years ago might now be able to qualify to buy. So if you think that you might not be able to qualify for a loan, talk to a home-loan professional. You may be pleasantly surprised.

If you are interested in purchasing, it is important to go through the qualification process with a lender in order to become prequalified. In this escalating market, we are seeing more multiple-offer situations, and an offer with a strong prequalification letter may sometimes be the accepted even over a higher-priced offer. That's because agents and buyers know that a secure offer that can close is a better choice than a deal with risky or no financing in place.

According to Broderick Perkins at Realtor.com, there are three steps to getting a mortgage:

Examine your finances.

It's important to know exactly where you stand financially so you can accurately determine a payment that you are comfortable with; don't forget about taxes, dues, insurance and the general expenses of being a homeowner.

Shop for a loan.

A little knowledge goes a long way in this step. There are two types of lenders: direct lenders and mortgage brokers. Direct lenders have money to lend while mortgage brokers work with many different lenders and programs. Ask about all the fees involved in the loan and process, keeping in mind that the lowest interest rate is not always the best deal. Make sure your lender is attentive to you. You, the consumer, are in the driver's seat and have the power to move on to another lender at any time.

Apply for the Loan.

This sounds like an easy enough task yet it can be the hardest part of buying a home. You will need to provide information about your job and income. Employment stability may be a factor. You will have to provide information about assets (property, cars, bank accounts and investments) and liabilities (auto loans, installment loans, mortgages, credit-card debt, household expenses and more). The lender will run your credit report to look at your FICO scores, which are very important when it comes to determining the rates and terms you will be offered. Your loan will then be submitted to an underwriter, who will either sign off on it or add conditions, such as proof of income and expenses or an appraisal of the property.

Ask about any fees and always get a list of them upfront and in writing; there's no downside to asking and the upside is that the fees might be negotiable. Finally, keep in mind that your realtor can be a valuable resource as you go through this process.

Once you have your pre-approval letter in hand, you can start the fun part: searching for the perfect home. In the desert, there are many communities to consider.

ARIZONA

Talking Rock Ranch, Prescott

Welcome to Talking Rock, a 3,600-acre private community in a rural setting north of Phoenix and south of Flagstaff. Prescott's mild four-season climate means residents have ample opportunity to enjoy championship golf, as well as fine dining, a variety of outdoor recreational activities, a first-class fitness center and as active a social calendar as they desire.

Talking Rock's classic course has generous landing areas, greens clearly visible from every fairway and strategic bunkers. There are five sets of tees on each hole to accommodate every level of player. The course was designed to fit into the existing landscape, preserving majestic stands of trees and naturally conforming to the contours of the land. For those who wish to hone their skills, there is an 18-acre practice area with tees, dual putting and short-game practice areas and more. In keeping with the ranch setting, the typical large clubhouse has been replaced with The Ranch Compound, based on the traditional ranch concept of connected yet separate buildings. These connections are via porches and patios that offer indoor and outdoor fireplaces and breezeways. The Barn fitness center features the latest equipment as well as classes and spa treatments to rival the finest facilities. Weekend hiking groups enjoy 30 miles of trails.

"Talking Rock Ranch has thought of everything to make life on the ranch as comfortable and as active as residents like. It is golf course living at it's finest," notes Len McGee, associate broker with Windermere Real Estate Northern Arizona. "I just love the layout and amenities of this community, and my clients have been so happy here. Our local market is buzzing with business and there has never been a better time to buy with interest rates still low and prices that entice."

Typical of homes here is one recently listed at $795,000. The 4,132-square-foot home situated along the 10th fairway on a private cul-de-sac has five bedrooms and five baths as well as a guest casita. Among the features: travertine flooring, granite countertops, high ceilings, a huge master suite and stone fireplace. The property is fully landscaped and on drip system, and includes both a covered and open porch. The community has a post office, store, dog park and community garden.

CALIFORNIA

Rancho Las Palmas Country Club, Rancho Mirage

Rancho Las Palmas Country Club is adjacent to the sumptuous Rancho Las Palmas Resort & Spa. The club surrounds the Ted Robinson-designed golf course, which encompasses three different nine-hole layouts: the North Course, South Course and West course, each with its own flavor.

Windermere Real Estate agent John Jay, who has been a specialist in this community for more than 18 years, noted at the time of this writing that Rancho Las Palmas Country Club featured a good inventory of 23 homes for sale. "But," he added, "prices are increasing and now is the time to act."

Part of the community's appeal lies in its location across from The River, which features fine dining, movie theaters, shopping and much more. Homes in Rancho Las Palmas are duplex-style condominiums that range in price from the $300s to $400s. Because it's an older community, buyers will find the least expensive units in more original condition and the higher-priced units are those that have been upgraded. Typical of the latter is a 1,693-square-foot unit that sold for $449,000. The three-bedroom, two-bath home was beautifully updated with a fabulous open kitchen featuring premium appliances, wood cabinetry, granite countertops and a raised breakfast bar. Views include both mountains and fairways.

Beyond golf, the club offers the largest tennis facility in the desert, a spectacular clubhouse with a wide variety of dining choices, top-of-the-line golf-training facilities, lush locker rooms and a full fitness center—all within a short distance of the renowned Spa Las Palmas. The club has a variety of memberships,

And signs point to continued growth in transactions and prices. While there is still some worry about so-called shadow inventory, many experts believe that the inventory will trickle out as most banks are working with clients to short sale or refinance their homes. As prices rise, the number of underwater borrowers will continue to decrease, thus eliminating the problem all together.

According to Patrick Mahon, branch manager of Stearns Lending, Inc. in Palm Desert, Calif., "As long as someone has decent credit and verifiable income, it is easy to get a home loan. We also have to know the borrower's deposit history if large deposits show on the bank statements, and we need to show where the down payment money is coming from. If a buyer is willing to cooperate with the lender, money is readily available, even for Jumbo loans."

With money loosening up from lenders, there are going to be more buyers ready to buy, including some who will be returning to including sport, tennis, and golf, that allow members to craft the lifestyle that works for them within the safety of a guard-patrolled, gated community. There is an active social calendar with holiday-themed celebrations, poker nights, dance lessons, daytrips and dinner dances.

Now is the Time

On Feb. 21, CNN Money noted that home prices rose 12.3 percent, taking the median to $173,600—the biggest percentage gain since January 2005. Experts believe the rise has been driven by a combination of tight inventories, increased demand from buyers and a drop in sales of distressed homes, such as those in foreclosure.

the market after previously losing their homes to short sale or foreclose. This increase in buyers will continue to drive prices up, so don't miss the window of opportunity. Money is still cheap and prices are still below building costs in many communities.

Simply say, "show me the money" to your lender of choice, and you could be in the home of your dreams before you know it.

The Desert Golf Magazine guide to eating out in the Coachella Valley

Figue Mediterranean's Executive Chef François de Méloque
at the Acacia Wood "Chefs Table"

Spring is the ideal time to enjoy all that the Coachella Valley has to offer. The perfect days lengthen, activity and events abound, golfers have found the rhythm to their swings and the local dining scene is in full order. Options and flavors grace the entirety of the valley, with settings ranging from snow-capped mountain vistas to the intimacy of some of the region's most romantic spaces. In this issue, we recommend some new adventures and our trusted favorites. Whichever you choose, a pleasurable experience awaits.

No exploration of desert dining is complete without a trip to Firecliff Restaurant (73-725 El Paseo, Palm Desert, Calif.), where the ambience is as satisfying as the food. "A lot of people who come for the first time say they were drawn in because of the terrace and seeing people mingling around the bar," says Patricia Hook, Firecliff's proprietor and head chef. "I think it's very unusual on this street to have open-air dining where you can see people walking by. We're not on street level, we're up and elevated, and I don't know if any other restaurant is quite like that."

Daytime visitors should check out the fresh catch of the day or, perhaps, the ahi wrap (with crunchy vegetables for perfect texture). Patrons can also go light with one of Firecliff's signature salads. "I think we're known for our California Cobb salad, which is a variety of baby greens, goat cheese, sweet white corn, avocado, fresh Roma tomatoes and a little bit of red onion, all tossed in balsamic vinaigrette," Hook says. "And the twist, being a California version, is that there are also dates."

In the evening hours, there's nightly piano entertainment to accompany the varied and creative menu. Hook has several suggestions for appetizers, including the grilled wild mushroom plate, which she says elicits many requests for the recipe. "I would say my favorite on the menu is probably the Maryland blue crab cakes," she adds, "which are served with a green salad tossed in whole grain mustard vinaigrette."

Among the entrees: a nightly seafood special, Colorado rack of lamb, Snake River pork chop with apple-cornbread stuffing and cider glaze, and a grilled pork tenderloin served on a pool of beurre blanc accented with pasilla chili sauce. One item Hook says patrons return for again and again is the roasted poblano chile, which has blackened chicken tucked inside with jack cheese and chipotle lime aioli, served with mango rice, sweet white corn and red peppers.

from locally sourced lemons. If you don’t drink it in, opt instead for the delectable Limoncello whoopie pie. Cello’s roots as a catering company are still showcased in services provided for private parties large or small; another worthy option for a more private affair is the Chef’s Table, for which guests must call in advance.

Don’t be intimidated by the sizeable menu or ample portions at Manhattan in the Desert (2665 E. Palm Canyon Drive, Palm Springs). Diners here enjoy East Coast flavors complemented by a warm West Coast welcome, and nosh away across the breakfast, lunch and dinner menus. On the way out, be sure to stop at the bakery case for some of the fresh items on display. Perfect for families or hungry guests who have just flown in, Manhattan’s deli fare is also ideal for a golfing crew looking to satisfy a post-round appetite on the west end of the valley.

A Big Fish The Corvette Stingray

By Aaron Atwood

Corvette unveils Stingray, the first new Vette since 1996

The 2014 Corvette is a re-introduction of some of the brand's classic design elements, and the result is a car that is meaner, leaner and sexier than ever. Chevy is calling the Corvette C7 the Stingray, a harkening back to yesteryear when Corvette embodied all that was the American muscle car.

There is little doubt from first glance to detailed inspection that the C7 is every bit the car that Corvette has ever been. While more definitive bodylines give it a bit more dramatic appearance, the footprint hasn't changed much. After all, this is a piece of Americana that designers dare not mess with too much for fear of losing the car's fan base.

Though early rumors were that the C7 might have a mid-mounted engine, those were simply rumors—perhaps ginned up to create buzz. In the end, the only noise needed is that coming from the quad exhausts embedded in the rear apron.

Purists will have a lot to praise. An almost angry front end glides expectantly to the rear deck. A slightly brawnier looking hood adds bulk. Quintessential Stingray elements such as the side vents make grandfathers across America want to consider trading in their Cadillac for the sportier Vette.

The truth is, there are few other cars in the world as recognizable as the Corvette, and the C7 is a good move in the right direction for a redesign. The most obvious changes in terms of body style are the squared taillights replacing the circular lights in the C6. With some resemblance to the current Camaro taillights, the look is certainly more aggressive if not entirely original. The more modern looking elements give “old timers” some reason to pause—but that's likely to end as soon as the stoplight turns green.

The 6.2-liter engine gives the C7 the fastest 0-to-60 time ever released in a production Corvette. In less than four seconds, the Stingray is breaking the 60 mph barrier. It's estimated that the acceleration produces over 1 g of force. Who needs the Blue Angels when you have the Stingray?

The interior won't feel like a stripped-down fighter jet either. The team working on the C7 went back to the drawing board to get the interior right. Decades-long complaints about lack of appointments inside the Corvette are silenced with the C7. Two different seats—a racing and a base model—are optional but comfortable. Gone are the plastic and faux chrome. Now the interior feels more like it's part of the car that changed the American automotive landscape.

From the gauges to the controls, the C7 will leave you feeling that you are the center of attention. The carbon-fiber inserts are cutting edge, but the technology is appropriate for the 21st Century without going geek on you.

The performance package offered in the Z51 upgrade is where things get really good. This package beefs up the all the indicators significantly. The Z51 models have a dry-sump oiling system, shorter gearing, large Bilstein dampers, a rear stabilizer bar and stiffer leaf springs. The wheels increase to 19 inches in front and 20 inches in the back.

The package also welds on a spoiler to reduce lift and adds air vents strategically to cool brakes, axels and just about everything else except the driver. Most of the elements were lifted from GM's racing team, which is how the new Corvette ended up with a rear side window as well.

The C7 takes customization to a new level with all kinds of options you can dial in. The Drive Mode Selector manages more than a dozen items, including suspension, throttle, fuel management, Magnetic Ride Control, steering tightness, engine sound and stability, and traction control. There are five pre-programmed settings: Weather, Eco, Tour, Sport and Track, but each aspect within those settings can also be tailored to your desires. The internal control panel delivers feedback to the driver to help ascertain best conditions and drive mode.

At around $55,000 loaded, the C7 is a symbol of American leadership in automotive genius. This work of art shows signs that GM is ratcheting up performance and competition on the global market. You'll find your patriotism meter on an all-time high behind the wheel of the Stingray.

Golf Wear Mends Fashion and Function

By Françoise Rhodes

New colors, new styles, new technology

In Fiamme

Each January, the granddaddy of all golf-related merchandising shows spreads across three blocks and several floors of the Orange County Convention Center in Orlando. And as is true many years at the venerable PGA Merchandise Show, equipment and fashion dominated the vendor booths this year, with trendsetting apparel making an especially bold statement with new colors, new designs and new ideas about sportswear technology.

Trending out of the 2013 limelight are wild neon colors, replaced by subtle blues, reds and greens. With the exception of Loudmouth Golf, which in keeping with its singularly independent style has just added Cupcakes, Drop Cloth, Shagadelic Pink and Old Glory to its color palette, it appears that blaringly bright is now fading to light.

In addition to a change in hues, there has been a perceptible shift in the overall trend of golf fashion and gear at this year's show, related to both technology and lifestyle. Designers are listening to what professionals and other players are saying, with the result that today's clothing no longer resembles what we think of as classic golf attire. Instead, pieces are being produced that work on the golf course, at the gym or for a rendezvous with friends after a round. The look is golf smart and street smart, hybrid designs that make the clothing exceptionally versatile, yet with all the technological bells and whistles that enhance performance, too.

One reason for this trend may be that manufacturers are no longer asking professionals just to wear their lines, they're asking them to help design them as well.

Oakley signed Bubba Watson to represent its apparel line and its new line of light shoes. Watson also influenced the 19th Hole Collection by Kentwool, which features the red and black colors of his alma mater, the University of Georgia, as well as the green Masters edition. oakley.com, shop.kentwool.com

Keegan Bradley represents the red, white and blue of Tommy Hilfiger, while occasionally sporting evergreen and yellow solids and stripes, creating the all-around American boy look. tommy.com

Graeme MacDowell teamed up with Irish company Kartel for his new line G-Mac, which is elegantly high-end country club style. kartel.ie/g-mac

The key to great golf apparel today is its ability to take golfers from the course to Rodeo Drive without even a pause. In Fiamme, Italy's finest golf apparel company, recently introduced its Primavera (Spring) Collection, which offers exactly the kind of hybrid style to do that. The line of hand-sewn, custom-designed men's shirts features space-dyed, multicolored woven yarns. That subtle, elegant technique results in a soft rainbow-like effect visible within the woven fabrics. This stunning line of golf apparel can be found in country clubs, resorts and fine clothiers throughout North America. infiamme.net

Just as golf wear for men is becoming both highly functional and beautifully fashionable, that same aesthetic has gained momentum for the ladies as well. Fashion icon Tommy Hilfiger has a line of shorts and skorts that can be worn just as appropriately on the course or at a charity luncheon. It's all about sleek and sassy—and picking the right style for you. Hip-hugging shorts, for example, should stop right above the knee, while skorts are meant to be shorter, form fitting and provide just a touch of sexiness. tommy.com

One style note we can all agree on is that the washed out, sweaty, wrinkled look is a thing of the past, outdated and unacceptable. Thanks to technological advances in sportswear, never before have there been so many products able to dramatically improve your game and meet the needs of your active lifestyle, wherever you are in golf ability or your life. The trends in golf fashion and gear are diversified enough to work for every type of player, from the tiniest of tots to the greatest icons of the game.

The pros are already wearing and promoting the latest lines. Think of tournament fairways as the golf industry's catwalks for the fashion trends of today and tomorrow. Like what you see? It will be coming to a pro shop near you shortly.

Right now, as club shops clear out last year's designs, general managers behind the scenes are getting ready to display the new lines recently purchased at the 2013 PGA Merchandise Show. Racks and shelves will soon be loaded up with the latest offerings from manufacturers and designers, the latest colors and styles. But it's not just about looks. When you invest in the newest lines, you are also taking advantage of and benefitting from the remarkable technology that continues to dominate the industry and up the value of golf wear—on and off the course.

Consider that when you step onto the tee. Or Rodeo Drive.

Roberto Coin Boutique

Make an entrance, make a statement with head-turning earrings

With the official awards season now behind us, from the Golden Globes and Grammys to the Oscars, the standards have been set for the fashion and jewelry trends of 2013. As expected during the season when all the elite entertainers are sashaying down multiple red carpets, there was a dazzle here and a gasp there. The major gasp this year was over the necklace Carrie Underwood so elegantly wore at the Grammy Awards. It was a Johnathon Arndt piece featuring 381 carats of oval, pear, marquise and round brilliant-white diamonds. Reported cost: $31 million.

Not surprising, no other neck adornment was able to trump Underwood's as the standout of the season. Sure, there were a few statement necklaces that sparkled and made us look, but the award for most dazzling jewelry this year goes to earrings.

Wearing oversized stones, shoulder-grazing drops or Stonehenge-like slabs, celebrities were careful to turn their heads slowly lest they injure themselves with the millions of dollars in gems and metals dangling from their earlobes.

Brilliant white diamonds seemed to be the most prevalent gemstone, followed by colored diamonds, emeralds, rubies and opals, and even black enamel. A smattering of all-gold chandelier earrings made an appearance on the red carpets; however, minus the diamonds they were hardly showstoppers.

Now that you've blurted out to everyone you know, "I must have those earrings," it's time to act. We've found several fine jewelers who are happy to indulge your desires and custom design the earrings of your dreams, with or without the limitations of a budget. But some of the styles already created will easily turn heads as well.

The Roberto Coin Fantasia Earring collection consists of 18K white gold with black and white diamonds. There are three different styles, ranging in price from $9,100 to $10,700. To view this fine collection, visit Roberto Coin Boutique on El Paseo in Palm Desert, Calif. Coinusa.com

As is true of all art, the beauty of jewelry is very much in the eye of the beholder, and trends are only one element of what designers believe will enhance our wardrobe or make us feel wonderful. In fact, it is often an emotional connection to a piece that makes it truly special, and jewelry that holds or evokes a memory is often the most valuable to us, regardless of the price. When we see such a piece we yearn to own it, wear it and enjoy it.

El Paseo Jewelers understand that concept and thus offers its customers the utmost selection of one-of-a-kind pieces. Among them: 14K white gold, emerald and diamond earrings containing 2.67 carats of pear-shape emeralds, 1.40 carats of pear-shape diamonds and 1.44 carat total weight of round brilliants surrounding each pear shape and in the center of the earrings.

Other red-carpet-worthy designs from this Coachella Valley jeweler include 18K yellow-gold-and-diamond dangle earrings containing 8.36 carat total weight of brilliant color and clarity. Prices are upon request. El Paseo Jewelers is located on El Paseo in Palm Desert. elpaseojewelers.com

For the namedroppers—and the cachet that comes with the names in terms of value—we have Neil Lane, Lorraine Schwartz and Tiffany & Co. For the cutting-edge fashionista looking for the next marquis talent, we suggest visiting high-end art galleries. Jewelry design is an art and many gallery owners give designers space to show their private collections. A Gallery Fine Art in Palm Desert, known for exclusivity and for showcasing jewelry with attitude and superb design, is just such a place. Visit in person after previewing pieces at agalleryfineart.com

The awards season and galas are over for most celebrities; however, for the country-club crowd they've only just begun. When it comes time to make your entrance, throw your shoulders back, keep your hair out of the way and dazzle the world with your exquisite earrings, all the while remembering that while celebrities only borrow their sparklers, yours are for keeps!
